START MOVE TO CUT DOWN NAVY

Admiral Tells Parliament Great Fleets No Longer Essential

PUBLIC FEARS A CUT

Eight Years May Bring About Conditions That Make Navy Obsolete

By DAVID M. CHURCH.
LONDON.—The time has come when Great Britain's great navy should be reduced, according to Rear Admiral Beatty, M. P., "the navy of the future, fully manned, is no longer necessary to the empire, and the taxpayer should have the advantage of savings brought about by naval reductions. Rear Admiral Beatty states, "If the money is spent in the right way in the development of submarines and aircraft the security of our empire can be maintained with far less expenditure than hitherto," the rear admiral said.

This position is taken in opposition to a prolonged and growing protest which has gone up from many quarters in England since the Washington conference and since the decision of the committee recommended great naval reductions. There are many in England who are fearful lest economies and disarmament treaties will result in Britain no longer ruling the waves, and there is an active campaign on foot to keep the British navy at the maximum of strength possible under existing conditions.

Peace For Ten Years.
"For the next ten years, on the government declares, it is unlikely that Britain will be called upon to fight any great power," according to Rear Admiral Beatty.
"We are now informed that only two of four capital ships are to be proceeded with as a result of the decisions of the Washington conference. Before the greater part of this decade of promised peace has passed about many changes in the prosecution of naval warfare. Indeed, many naval experts today cavil at building capital ships at all and would prefer to pin their faith to submarines and aircraft. To delay the building of these ships for several years would surely be judicious, for, apart from the enormous saving to the taxpayer now, it may be that in ten years these ships would be obsolete.

"Have Up-to-date Ones."
"Eight years is usually taken as the life of a battleship. If we are going to have capital ships for our next great conflict let us have up-to-date ones.

"The admiralty now reluctantly agrees that the personnel of the navy can be cut down by 10,000 in the coming year. If only the chiefs at the admiralty would follow the policy of the great seaman, Lord Fisher, the principle of nucleus crews could be extended with advantage and enormous economies effected. We have in this country thousands of fine seamen who could speedily be called together in any emergency.

"I feel confident that the taxpayers of the country are with me when I say that as far as the fighting services are concerned no blunder as is required."

Literally True.
"It is not this is a one-horse town," said the city fellow.
"You said it, old man," replied the suburbanite. "Everybody in town has an automobile but one man, and he sticks to his horse."

Undertakers Start a Plan to Chase Gloom From Funeral Services

NEW YORK, April 7.—The sting will be taken from death and victory wrested from the grave if members of the Associated Undertakers of New York have their way. The atmosphere of gloom that pervades the profession of undertakers must be abolished, declares Frank E. Campbell, president of that organization.

"We plan," declares Campbell, "to discard black gloves, black funeral chapels and somber countenances. The day of the long-faced undertaker has passed. We must keep pace with the times by conducting funeral services as sublimely beautiful as to relieve the bereaved of sorrow."
Richly ornate furniture and beautiful tapestries should supplant the meaningless simplicity of funeral chapels, Campbell stated. Bronze statues and rugs of artistic and historic value should be upon the floors, he said.
"Caskets," continued Campbell, "should have colors to match the decorated rooms. Purple and gray caskets are too suggestive of death. The dead should be surrounded with more healthy colors. I see no reason why caskets of gold plush cloth should not be utilized. Anyway, we should have caskets that will add to the mellow atmosphere of the chapel."

TULSA FINALLY LOCATES MOTHER

Happiness Has Just Come to Two Women Living in Unhappy Russia

Somewhere in unhappy Russia there are two women to whom happiness has just come with the assurance that the son and brother, from whom they have been separated by a silence covering seven weary, dreary years of war and revolution, is still alive and well in America, and that his love will be a shield from the wolves and famine abroad in Russia.
The women are Mrs. Dorothy Greglett and her daughter, Helen, and the young man Eric Greglett of this city. Greglett has been trying, unsuccessfully, to locate his mother and sister ever since that fatal time in 1914 when the world went to war and they were prevented from starting the postulated voyage to America. Fortunately, the capture by the Germans of the Baltic port which was their home and subsequent advances by the enemy drove the three women into the interior. Their communications may have miscarried or were mislaid by his change of address from Cleveland, Ohio to United States army, and two years of service at home and abroad in the footprints of an aviation unit, and, after his discharge, his change of residence from the army to Tulsa.

Greglett took up the search again through the Red Cross and recently received a telegram from the London office of the American relief administration stating that his mother and sister were in Krasnokolshaisk in destitute circumstances and needed help urgently. The relief administration offered, upon arrangement with Greglett, to cable them cash or funds, stating that food deliveries could be made only in multiples of $10. Greglett made the arrangements immediately and is now waiting to hear from his relatives, whom he hopes to bring to America. The mother is an Englishwoman, though Greglett and his sister were born in Russia.

Greglett, now employed with the Power Engineering company, 211 South Cincinnati, came to America charge, his change of residence from the army to Tulsa.

When a 15-year-old boy with his father, having gained his father's permission to accompany him, after going on a hunger strike. The father died last summer. The young man took out his second naturalization papers just before he sailed for France, and he says he has no desire to return to Russia and that he would not even harbor thoughts of the country where his loved ones now were.
